offenba'ren, v a and refl 1. to manifest, to make public, 2 to reveal; 3 to discover, disclose, open (a secret); sich or sein Herz —, to unbosom one's self

Syn offenbaren, bekannt machen, eröffnen, anzeigen, entdecken, verrat(h)en That which is bekannt gemacht is brought to the knowledge of others, that which is angezeigt is intended for the information of one or more whom it more particularly interests or concerns. When we inform a person of anything, in which we ourselves are interested, with a view to influence his will, we eröffnen it to him. That which is bekannt gemacht, angezeigt or eröffnet is not necessarily anything secret, but whatever is offenbart, entdeckt or verrat(h)en, has been till then a secret. Entdecken can take place involuntarily, by chance or want of caution and is in this distinguished from offenbaren. Verrat(h)en borders nearly on entdecken, but is distinguished from it in this, that verrat(h)en is commonly an Entdeckung of something which in itself is bad and likely to have dangerous consequences; whereas entdecken may be the discovery of an action in itself good and allowed, as also of something, the making known of which is not injurious to the Entdeckten.

Syn. pflegen, gewohnt ſein. We pflegen to do a thing, in so far as we repeat an action under similar circumstances, we are gewohnt to do a thing, when we do it willingly or because we conceive it to be good. Thus we pflegen to smoke, when we do so as often as we have the time and opportunity; but we are gewohnt to smoke, when we find a pleasure in it. Pflegen, therefore, is said of inanimate things, also; gewohnt ſein, only of sentient and rational beings.

Syn. Pflicht, Obliegenheit, Schuldigkeit Pflicht indicates every kind of moral necessity, whatever its object may be. A Pflicht becomes, however, a Schuldigkeit toward the person we are bound to perform it, and this an Obliegenheit, when that which we are bound to do has been undertaken by ourselves or imposed on us by another. There are Pflichten which no one can require from us; for we have not only Pflichten toward ourselves, but also toward God (which are left to our conscience) and even toward animals. Schuldigkeit and Obliegenheit can be required from us by those to whom we are indebted. There are, however, onerous Pflichten also, and these only can be called Obliegenheiten.

Syn. platt, flach, niedrig. The Platte has no perceptible elevation, the Fläche no perceptible depression. The flache hand or palm stands in opposition to the closed hand or fist, and the Oberfläche of a body is its extension in length and breadth without thickness We call a witticism flach, when it does not go far into things, platt, when it is poor, common or vulgar. For we conceive the beautiful, the exquisite, etc., as something raised above what is common. In painting, however, platt and flach are used synonymously; they are often confounded also in common conversation. Platt and niedrig differ, in so much as platt betrays a visible want of wit and sense, niedrig a want of nobleness of sentiments. Platte flattery is undisguised and insipid; niedrige flattery discovers mean sentiments.

Syn. Platz, Raum. Platz implies a surface on which things may rest and move. When Raum is considered as synonymous with it, we understand leerer Raum, in each of the three dimensions. By Platz is generally understood, however, only a part of Raum. The Platz of a thing, therefore, is the part of an entire Raum, which everything takes upon it. Platz is always limited; leerer Raum is conceived as unlimited. Platz is a definite part of Raum plump, adj blunt, coarse; heavy, awkward, unwieldy.

Plumps, } m. and int. plump, bounce.

Syn. I. plump, schwerfällig, unbehülflich. Unbehülflich indicates awkwardness in motion, plump and schwerfällig its causes; the former implying the remote, the latter the proximate and immediate cause. The Plumpe has too great a mass and too rude a form. The galleons of the famous invincible fleet were plump engines and on that account extremely schwerfällig, so that they were too unbehülflich to escape the skilful manœuvering of the English ships.

Syn. II. plump, bäuerisch, unhöflich, grob, tölpisch. The Tölpel displeases by his clumsy motions arising from awkwardness, the Bäuerische displeases in his language, actions and manners from want of perception of what is becoming; but neither can be said to offend. The Plumpe and Grobe, however, fail in the respect which is due to others; the first merely from want of delicacy of feeling, the latter also from pride and contempt. The Plumpe, Grobe and Unhöfliche violate the respect due to others; the Unhöfliche merely omits what good breeding requires; the Grobe is really offensive both in language and actions.

Syn. Prunk, Pracht, Gepränge, Pomp, Prahlerei. Pomp approaches nearest to Pracht. It is an augmentation of the idea of Pracht, and indicates Pracht suited only for the highest or most distinguished persons, and on the most solemn occasions Gepränge approaches more nearly to Prunk. It signifies, in its origin, a frequent prangen; it is not, however, always without internal worth; only when it is vain and empty it is Prunk. Still lower than Prunk is Prahlerei, for this seeks to excite attention and admiration by excellencies which it does not possess or, at least, not in the degree it pretends to.

Syn. Putz, Schmuck, Zierde, Zierat(h), Verzierung, putzen, schmücken, zieren. Putzen implies properly a lower degree of beautifying; schmücken and zieren, a higher. Peasants putzen their rooms when they sweep and dust them. Schmuck embellishes a thing by splendour and costliness, Zierat(h)en by intrinsic beauty. Putzen, in general, therefore, means to embellish; schmücken, to embellish by splendour and costliness or on solemn festivals, zieren, to embellish by the addition of something in itself beautiful, but the beauty of which consists more in the exquisiteness of the form than in splendour or costliness. Zierde, Zierat(h), Verzierung, imply that with which anything is geziert or embellished; with this difference, however, that Zierde is applied also figuratively (e. g. modesty is the greatest Zierde of youth), and the two others not; while Zierat(h)en are mere trifles with which we seek to embellish anything. It is not every Zierat(h) in a building which is also a Verzierung.

Quack'falber, m (-s; pl. —) quack, mountebank.

Syn. Quackfalber, Marktschreier, Salbader. The Marktschreier is distinguished from the Quackfalber by his setting up his booth in public places and loudly proclaiming the merits of his medicines, the Quackfalber only goes into houses to recommend his medicines, or sends about printed bills in which he boasts of his cures. Quackfalber indicates, therefore, one who gives himself out for a physician although ignorant, Marktschreier by his boasting. Salbader seems to indicate a Quackfalber in a still more contemptible light; as one who seeks to hide his ignorance, in a chattering and confused way, by technical terms from the learned languages.

Qual, f. (pl -en) pain, torment, torture, pang, grief, affliction; in compos —belaſtet, adj. * loaded with pain or torments; —erfüllt, adj vid —voll; —göttin(n), f Fury; —voll, adj. and adv. full of pain, torments or anguish

Syn. Qual, Pein, Marter, Folter, Plage. Pein indicates the extent of pain as to its violence, Qual as to its duration. Pein implies, therefore, the generic idea of pain, Qual the various species of it. This is evident also from the fact that Qual has a plural, whereas Pein has not. Hence mere annoyances, which we strive to get rid of, can also quälen. The uncertainty whether what we design to do be right and good, often quält the best and most conscientious, but after a bad action the conscience of the bad man peinigt him. Children quälen an affectionate mother with their unreasonable requests. Folter and Marter are synonymous with Qual and Pein only in their figurative sense. Plage implies every kind of molestation. A nurse has much Plage with a sick child. Plage interrupts an agreeable state, Qual is an uninterruptedly painful one.

Recht'fertigung, f. vid. under compos of Recht, s.

Syn Rechtfertigung, Entſchuldigung, Schutzrede, Vert(h)eidigung, Verantwortung, Schutzſchrift When we try to prove that we have not done something bad of which we are accused, or that what we have done is not bad, we undertake our Rechtfertigung When, however, we grant that we have done it, and that it is wrong, we can only adduce reasons to diminish our culpability, and these serve as our Entſchuldigung A Schutzrede can do both. Maternal tenderness entſchuldigt a mother's indulgence for the rudeness of her children, but does not rechtfertigen it. When a Schutzrede contains merely an Entſchuldigung, it is still distinguished from the latter by its presupposing an accusation, which Entſchuldigung does not. A Vert(h)eidigung may either take place with arms, where one is forcibly attacked, or it may be only verbal against reproaches or accusations. A Schutzſchrift is a written Schutzrede Verantwortung differs from Vert(h)eidigung as relating only to an accusation of unjust actions, and secondly, that we can verantworten only our own actions, but we can vertheidigen those of another Verantwortung is distinguished from Schutzrede in this, that by the latter we also vert(h)eidigen another against an accusation, but by a Verantwortung only ourselves.

Syn. reden, ſprechen, ſagen. Sprechen is merely to utter the sounds which the words in any language require; reden, to express by words its sense; ſagen relates to what is uttered, whether it be the mere sounds or the subject of discourse. Parrots and some other birds may be said to ſprechen; but it would be absurd to say that a parrot had geredet a long time. Sagen is more immediately related with "to tell, to explain," as, tell me (ſagen Sie mir) where he lives (not reden Sie, or ſprechen Sie mir). It is, however, the same thing whether we say ſagen, reden, or ſprechen Sie mir nicht davon, do not speak to me about it.

Syn. regen, bewegen, rühren. Bewegen, in general, is to change the place of anything; the body bewegt sich through a greater or smaller space. Sich regen, is the beginning of motion, or its first element, and, therefore, indicates every little movement. Rühren is merely an intensitive of regen. Figuratively, rühren means to excite in any one the emotion of pleasing pain, but we can also bewegen one to a violent emotion or anger. An edifying sermon should rühren and bewegen the auditors.

Syn Ruhe, Raſt, Friede Ruhe, in general, is that state in which we do not move, Raſt, that in which a fatiguing motion ceases Hence Raſt is said only of living beings, for these only feel the fatigue of motion and the want of repose. Ruhe, on the contrary, is used of bodies whether inanimate or living. Raſt, moreover, only succeeds to motion in order to continue it Ruhe can precede all motion and continue forever. We raſten only after bodily motion, but there is also an internal Ruhe—that of the soul and mind That state in which the mind is not agitated by any emotion is called Ruhe; Friede, when not agitated by unpleasant emotions.

Syn. Schande, Schimpf, Schmach, Injurie, Entehrung Whatever diminishes the worthiness of any one in the eyes of others is for him a Schande; that which is a mark of dishonour for him is a Schimpf; when this consists in such a treatment as implies the want of every honourable feeling it becomes a Schmach. Schimpf and Injurie are distinguished from each other in this, that the former indicates any treatment by which a man suffers in his character, whether his honour had before been forfeited or not; Injurie, when his honour is intact. Entehrung arises either from the judicial sentence of the forfeiture of any one's honour or from the conversion of the favourable opinion of his moral worth into an injurious one.

Syn. Schreibart, Styl, Diction, Ton Styl is applied to a production in any of the fine arts. Schreibart, Diction, and Ton are applicable merely to rhetorical or poetical works. A royal palace must be built in a grand and majestic Styl, a summer house in a light and pleasing one. Thoughts and images constitute the Schreibart (style), sentiments give the Ton (tone). Diction (diction) is only applicable to the Schreibart of an individual author or work. Whatever practice a man may have in Styl or Schreibart, should he be without genius he will never attain the energetic Diction of a Herder or a Swift.

Syn. Schreiben, Brief, Sendschreiben. A written address to one or more individuals is denoted by the word Brief (letter) only as regards its form, and Schreiben (writing) with respect to its contents. A Sendschreiben is a writing which conveys a certain idea of solemnity or importance depending on the rank or dignity of the person to whom it is sent, or on its greater size, as well as on the amplification and elaborateness of the contents. It corresponds, therefore, to our "missive, dispatch, or epistle."

Syn. I. Schuld, Urſache. Schuld can only be employed for "cause," when the effect and motive are bad, but Urſache (cause) may be used indifferently, whether the effect and motive be good or bad.

Syn. II. ſchuldlos, unſchuldig. Schuld may be considered in two points of view. It is guilt or a fault, when it conveys the impression of a neglect of moral duty, together with its imputation and harm, when it implies an injury committed or a wrong sustained. This last idea prevails in unſchuldig (harmless), the first in ſchuldlos (guiltless, faultless), children are said to be unſchuldig (innocent) because they are incapable of doing anything wicked; when certain pleasures, games, sports, etc., are said to be unſchuldig (innocent, innocuous), all that is meant to be conveyed is that they are not detrimental, those are ſchuldlos (guiltless, innocent) which are not opposed to any moral law.

Syn. schwanken, wanken, wackeln, taumeln Schwanken (the intensive form of wanken) denotes a more violent motion by which a lofty body inclines nearer to the surface of the ground, and threatens to fall, should it be very heavy; towers, for instance, schwanken (rock, reel, wave) from a violent earthquake; wanken denotes a less violent motion, when incipient, and is "to waver;" wackeln expresses the movement of those things which ought to stand firm, but which do not stand sufficiently so. Taumeln is to move backward and forward irregularly as a living being may do; out of wackeln arises the capability of moving from one side to another from a want of firmness. A table wackelt (is rickety or loose); the milk-teeth begin to wackeln (grow loose) as soon as nature intends them to be shed. A man taumelt (staggers or reels) when giddy, when drunk, when only half awake or stupefied.

Syn Schwere, Gewicht, Wucht; schwer, wichtig Schwere and Gewicht are rendered manifest not only by motion, but also by pressure on the body that opposes the central or centripetal force. Wucht is, properly speaking, evident alone by force of momentum. Bodies differing from each other as to Gewicht (weight or specific gravity) fall with equal velocity in a vacuum, and therefore are of the same absolute Schwere (absolute gravity). Hence it appears that Schwere is heaviness or gravity, Gewicht weight, and Wucht ponderousness, ponderance. In a figurative sense, that which is schwer (heavy) requires much force or power, and that which is wichtig (weighty) produces great effects, is effective. It is eine schwere Frage (a difficult, grave question) what constitution or form of government may be the best, but it is wichtig (important, momentous) that the government be carried on as it ought to be.

ſeg'nen, v a. 1. to bless; utter a benediction, 2. to make the sign of the cross, to cross; 3. to spell, enchant; 4 + to utter an imprecation, to curse.

Syn. ſegnen, (einen) einſegnen, (einem) den Segen geben. Segnen (to bless) is principally distinguished from den Segen geben (to give the blessing or benediction) by this, that the former represents also the mere inward wish, while the latter expresses that wish by words or other signs. Thus the priest, at the close of divine service, gibt den Segen (gives the blessing) to his congregation; he gives also the nuptial benediction at the altar, etc. Einſegnen is to consecrate, also to devote by a blessing or by invoking the grace of God (e. g. children at confirmation).

Syn ſehen, anſehen, gaffen, angaffen, gucken, ſchielen, blinzen The act of directing the eyes to any object is expressed by anſehen (to look at); the ocular perception of that object by ſehen (to see). He who wants to ſehen (see) anything properly, must anſehen (look at) it, and he who anſieht anything within the scope of his vision, supposing his sight to be perfect, will also ſehen (see) it. Anſehen without attention is gaffen or angaffen, i. e. to gaze or stare stupidly, to gape at The Gaffer (gaper, starer, gazer) has his eyes wide open without seeing distinctly, or without being exactly conscious of what he really is seeing. Angaffen differs from gaffen in implying a definite object, while the latter is to gape at anything. Gucken expresses a part of the meaning of ſehen, viz.: that part denoting the direction of the eyes to the object, but implies besides the inquisitive approximation of the head toward the same. It is hence "to peep, peer, look inquisitively." Schielen is to squint, and blinzen is to blink, accompanied with winking, i. e. "to blink and wink."

*sel'ten, adj rare, scarce: unfrequent, seldom; extraordinary

Syn Selten, seltsam Selten is an attribute of anything that is seldom found or possessed, it implies something which always has a certain value derived from the very fact of its being uncommon, and very often it produces admiration, pride or delight it is, therefore, equivalent to "rare, scarce"; on the other hand seltsam is an epithet that conveys the idea of something not only uncommon, but likewise unusual, that differs from what our mind conceives to be true to the laws of nature, of sound reason, of universal custom, thereby exciting always surprise, very often risibility and perhaps contempt; hence it is appositely explained by strange, odd, or the familiar word queer; both words may sometimes be explained by singular or curious; if it makes us laugh or sneer, seltsam often answers to funny, droll.

Sel'ter(s)wasser, n Seltzer water selt'sam, adj. 1. strange, odd, irregular, wonderful; 2 + rare. es sieht — aus, it affords a strange sight. it looks odd

Syn Seltsam, unglaublich, wunderlich, wunderbar All these words, with the exception of unglaublich, have reference to the object or subject itself; unglaublich (incredible) expresses an opinion or judgment upon the possibility or reality of the said object, etc. Wunderlich (queer) refers merely to every action proceeding from our will or fancy, to every idea, etc, that is repugnant to stern reason or sober judgment; it is, therefore, either singular, eccentric, or whimsical. A capricious or fanciful man is wunderlich (singular, odd, whimsical), his actions are wunderlich (surprising, extraordinary), his ideas are wunderlich (eccentric, strange, fantastic) Wunderbar is wondrous, and wunderbar is wonderful. Seltsam is that which from being unusual or eccentric appears generally to be wrong or improper, it is, therefore, strange, odd, queer, singular, curious. Vid. also selten ſeufʒen, v n (h.) and a to sigh, groan ; nach etwas —, to sigh for or after.

Syn. Seufʒen, achʒen, ſtohnen Seufʒen (sighing) is produced as well by a deep and long-drawn inspiration as by a strong expiration. Stohnen and ächʒen are the strong expulsion of the breath attended with a painful sound. Seufʒen is, moreover, the more subdued expression of a mental suffering. Ächʒen shows the immediate presence of a pang or throe, and ſtohnen reveals the exhausting exertion of enduring suffering. The strict censor ſeufʒet (sighs) over the corruption of the times. A patient achʒt (groans, utters a groan) when racked by a pain. A man ready to sink under a burden, one mortally wounded, ſtohnt It seems, therefore, that achʒen is to groan acutely, and ſtohnen to utter low, moaning or deep groans, to groan heavily or gaspingly.

Syn Sippſchaft, Verwandtſchaft, Freundſchaft. All those belong to the Sippſchaft who are connected or related to each other by blood in an ascending or descending line, such as parents and children, their ancestors and posterity; they form, therefore, the genealogical tree. Befreundet differs from verwandt inasmuch as the former merely represents such persons as are connections by marriage, whilst Verwandte can also mean relatives or relations by birth. Hence the first is consanguinity, the second relationship, and the third affinity.

Syn. Spieß, Speer, Lanze. The two first words (= Spitze), which were originally the same, differ, however, now in this, that Speer is the superior word; one says the Spieß (pike, halberd) of a night-watchman, of an Uhlan, the Speer (spear) of a knight. The Lanze (Lat. lancea) is so called, either because it is long (lang), or from the French lancer (to throw, dart), so that Lanze (lance) was in its primitive meaning tantamount to Wurfſpieß (javelin, dart).

Syn. Sprengen, ſpritzen, ſtreuen Streuen (to strew) is used for dry substances, ſpritzen (to spurt, etc.) for fluids, and ſprengen (to sprinkle, scatter) for both. One ſtreuet (strews) sand over the floor, over ink not dry, flowers on the way. When ſprengen is used for dry substances, it differs in this from ſtreuen, that it is thrown in an inconsiderable measure over a surface; if meat is wished to be kept sweet for a few days, one ſprengt salt, etc., over it, which may be effected either by pinches or by shaking a little from the point of a knife, etc. Sprengen differs from ſpritzen through the violence or impulse with which the fluid body is impelled by the ſpritzen.

Syn. Stamm, Abſtammung, Abkunft, Geburt Geburt (birth) denotes one's origin from one's parents; Stamm (stock, stem, house) from the founder of one's family or line; Abſtammung (descent) one's connection with this founder by means of one's forefathers, ancestors or parentage; and Abkunft (extraction, lineage, race) one's connection with any progenitor, even if he should not be the most remote ancestor or founder. He who after his birth receives a diploma of nobility is not of noble Geburt, but his children are, though not of noble Abkunft, still less of noble Abſtammung and noble Stamm ſtam'meln, v a. and n (ḥ.) to stammer, stutter, hammer in speaking; to lisp; fig. to falter, pronounce, express in a faltering voice

Syn Stammeln, Stottern, Lallen. Stottern implies an interruption or break, and then a repetition of words or syllables accompanied by a painful feeling of exertion on the part of the person so speaking. It arises either from a natural defect or from an unfortunate habit. It is, therefore, identical with our "to stutter." Stammeln and lallen merely imply an imperfect utterance without the accompanying defects of stottern. The children lallen or stammeln, when their tongue, as yet imperfectly trained, utters words only partially or incorrectly; stammeln is, therefore, almost the same as our "to stammer." Lallen is the stronger word of the two, expressing the higher degree. Hence it is sometimes equivalent to our "to mutter;" in choice or poetical language it may be rendered by "to lisp."

Syn. Stellung, Stand. Stand is merely the place where the body appears to rest; Stellung indicates as well the relation of its height and the plane on which it reposes to the whole surface of the earth, as likewise that of its sides to those things which are contiguous. The vertical Stand is the most advantageous and also the most graceful Stellung for a tree, column or tower. Hence Stellung is "situation, posture or attitude," and Stand "position."

Syn. I. Stock, Stab, Stecken. The two former correspond to the English "stick, staff," vid. Hirtenſtab, Zauberſtab Wanderſtab, Bettelſtab u ſ.w. Hence Stab is the more elegant word of the two, and in poetry is often rendered by "wand." Stecken is a small or thin Stock, and is also a lower expression, Stock being the usual term for a walking-stick, Stecken is, therefore, the English "rod" or "switch"

Syn. II. Stock, Staude, Strauch, Buſch. The Staude, the Strauch, and the Buſch are woody or ligneous, and send forth several stems from one common root, the Strauch, however, differs from the Staude in this, that its numerous little stems are so twisted and distorted that they appear entangled, and the eye is baffled when attempting to trace them out individually. Strauch is, therefore, the frutex or real shrub, while Staude is more the shrub or low dwarf-tree A wide-spreading Strauch, when it consists of numerous little stems, all of them proceeding from one root, growing in a tangle or maze and having a great quantity of leaves, is called a Buſch (bush). A Stock is one single stem, e. g Roſenſtock, Nelkenſtock, Levkojenſtock.

Syn Strafe, Buße, Züchtigung Buße is the indemnification, reparation, amends which a person who has done wrong or who has committed an injury has to make either by reimbursement or other mode; Buße is therefore atonement, every other suffering which he has to undergo for the crime or wrong committed is the Strafe, i e penalty or punishment, when the party that inflicts the punishment has the intention of producing the reformation of the party punished, the Strafe is a Züchtigung or chastisement Some Strafen may be Züchtigungen at the same time. They are Strafen, as the deserved and proportionate consequences of a crime; they are Züchtigungen as a means of improvement. The Todesſtrafe (capital punishment) can for this reason be no Züchtigung, for in this life no reformation can be effected by it

Syn. Strophe, Vers. Verse (verses) are the smallest metrical parts of a poem; a single line is therefore also called a Vers, and a Strophe in a strain or song is said to consist of so many verses. Moreover, in this sense verses are distinguished by their feet, and a verse which consists of iambics is termed an iambic verse or line; if of trochees, a trochaic verse or line. Hence the German Vers is a verse or line, and the Strophe (strophe) is a verse or stanza.

Syn. Stube, Kammer, Zimmer, Gemach, Saal, Flur Stuben are those parts of the house which are usually and mostly occupied, and in northern climates containing each a stove or fireplace for warming the apartment in cold weather. A Kammer is not usually used as a sitting-room, and is therefore not generally furnished with a stove, vid. Schlafkammer, Kleiderkammer, Speiſekammer. In superior dwelling-houses those handsome and convenient rooms which are fitted up for one's usual occupation are called Zimmer, and in a higher style Gemach; vid. Schlafgemach. A Saal is a spacious and wide Zimmer, only intended for company. Flur is that space which is at the entrance of a house, between the Zimmer, and is also sometimes called the Vorſaal. Hence Stube is a sitting-room or parlour, Kammer, chamber, Zimmer, room, Gemach, apartment, Saal, drawing-room, and Flur the anteroom, when not on the ground-floor, for then it is the hall.

Syn. Stumm, ſprachlos Stumm (dumb) is that which utters no sound, ſprachlos (speechless) merely that which cannot speak (as sometimes man). Therefore all animals should not be said to be naturally ſtumm, but ſprachlos. For some, such as different birds of song, utter many varied sounds or notes, and they only verſtummen (are or become dumb) under peculiar circumstances. In this sense certain animals alone (e.g. fishes) are completely ſtumm.

Syn Tadel, Mißfallen, Mißbilligung Mißfallen (dislike or displeasure) is the reverse of Gefallen, and consists, in the first place, of a mere feeling for which we often can neither account to ourselves nor assign the reason to others; that which we tadeln (blame or censure) and mißbilligen (disapprove), implies faults of which we are clearly conscious and which we can show or, at all events, think we can Mißfallen can be limited to the mere feeling and be kept confined in one's own mind, but when a person tadelt and mißbilligt, he lets his opinion be known either with intelligible signs or more generally with words. Lastly, irrational and even inanimate things and their effects may also mißfallen (displease) us, but we tadeln and mißbilligen only for actions and their effects t(h)eil'len, v I. a. to divide, part, share; II. refl. 1. to split, to separate; 2 to divide itself, be divided; 3 recipr. to share one with another (ſich in etwas —).

Syn T(h)eilen, eint(h)eilen, abt(h)eilen, zert(h)eilen. T(h)eilen is generally to separate a whole into parts. Eint(h)eilen (to dispose, etc.) denotes that one separates the greater whole into smaller parts of a definite regular number, or a thing of higher rank into parts of inferior rank. This may be done by the mind merely; if this separation is also made evident to the senses by outward signs, it then becomes abt(h)eilen (to part off, to divide, etc.). Zert(h)eilen (to part asunder, to disconnect, dissever) is separating the constituent parts of a whole in such a manner that they exist as independent wholes for themselves.

Syn. T(h)ier, Vieh The term Vieh is limited to domestic animals. It is, however, far more comprehensive than the English "cattle," which merely implies oxen and cows, vid Federvieh, Zugvieh, Mastvieh, Schlachtvieh, Rindvieh u. s. w. The ant is considered an industrious T(h)ier and the bee a prudent T(h)ier Hence the term "animal" is not the full equivalent for T(h)ier, for, although all living things are animals, the word cannot be used in common life for an insect, a bird, or a fish, etc, but these words must be substituted for the German T(h)ier as the context may require.

t(h)ie'risch, adj. animal; brutish, beastly, bestial; die —e Wärme, animal heat.

Syn. T(h)ierisch, viehisch, brutal. T(h)ierisch in man is every thing that he has in common with other animals. This is not opposed to the prerogatives of his reasoning nature, and does not exclude them That which is opposed to them, is viehisch. Every gratification of sensuality has something t(h)ierisch (of the animal) in it, but that indulgence which by its violation of nature's laws or by its extreme excess degrades man from the rank obtained by his reason, is viehisch (brutal, bestial) Brutal is an epithet of the coarsest sensuality.

Syn Thräne, Zähre Thräne denotes every trickling drop, Zähre only that one which flows from the source of pain. Zähre has therefore invariably a moral sense. Thräne may have likewise a purely physical one Moreover, Zähre flows only from motives of benevolence. Thräne is also the expression of pain at pain felt by one's self. "Tear" is the only word in English.

til'gen, v. a. 1 to blot out; 2 to eradicate, efface, extinguish; 3. to pay, annul; eine Schuld —, to pay, discharge, cancel a debt.

Syn. Tilgen, vertilgen, zerſtören, ausrotten, vernichten. Ausrotten corresponds exactly to the English, "to root out, extirpate, eradicate," and vernichten is "to annihilate" We tilgen something that is disagreeable, disadvantageous, etc, to us, e. g weeds, vermin, debts, and do so by extirpating (ausrotten) the first, and figuratively speaking, the second, the last by paying it. The English for this is "to get rid of." Vertilgen always implies violent measures, it is "to exterminate." Hence we may say, vertilgen weeds, vermin, but not debts. A person zerſtört merely those things, which are composed of component parts, by disturbing their state of rest, by strewing them asunder, etc. Time zerſtört everything, but it does not vernichten The use of the latter, unless it is applied to God, is always figurative or hyperbolical.
